6A Variables

Learning intentions

- Understand the concept of a variable
- Complete a table of values for a given relationship
- Plot a graph of a relationship between two variables
- Recognise patterns in the Cartesian plane

Variables, rules and formulas

1 A variable is a letter or symbol that can stand for a number.

2 A formula is a quantity that can take on different values. It is written as a mathematical expression.

3 For example, the number of oranges you can buy for $10 depends on the price of an orange. In this example, the number of oranges and the price of an orange are variables.

4 A rule is a statement that describes the relationship between two or more variables.

5 For example, the relationship between the area variable A and the side length variable s of a square is $A = s^2$.

6 A formula is a rule where using parentheses. The area A of a square with side length s is given by $A = s^2$.

Tables of values and graphs

1 A table of values is a table that lists the values of one or more variables for different values of another variable.

2 The relationship between two variables can be displayed in a graph. The variables are plotted on the horizontal axis and the other variable is plotted on the vertical axis.

3 When the relationship between two variables is linear, the graph is a straight line. The relationship between two variables is linear if the variables are plotted on the horizontal axis and the other variable is plotted on the vertical axis.

4 The relationship between two variables is linear if the variables are plotted on the horizontal axis and the other variable is plotted on the vertical axis.
